

CV DOS AND DON'TS

Your Curriculum Vitae is one of the most important documents that you'll ever write. Think about it. It's one of the only communication tools you have to get on the next rung of the career ladder, so you need to make a great impression from the first page. Think of your CV like it's your personal publicist. It outlines your academic, professional and personal achievements, and your professional goals and aspirations. In a nutshell, it tells your (hopefully) new boss how awesome you are and, more importantly, why you're a better choice than anyone else. But (and this is a big 'but') your CV needs to do all of this in just a few seconds, amid a shouting throng of other CVs all competing for your job.

ON AVERAGE A HIRING MANAGER SPENDS...

LOOKING AT AND REVIEWING A CV.

THE DOS

CONSIDER
YOUR FONT Keep the size of your text between 9-12 points

Use traditional styles like:
Calibri and Times New Roman
Avoid Comic Sans at all costs

TAILOR YOUR CV

Customise your CV for the job you are applying for

PROOFREAD

It's not a good look to submit a CV full of spelling mistakes. Txt lingo is not OK either! If you're not sure, ask someone else to look over it before you hit 'send'

USE ACTION WORDS

Words such as managed, improved, achieved, created and influenced show that you have actively achieved tasks.

THE DON'TS

Use old emails.

sexymonkey@yahoo.com

INCLUDE A PHOTOGRAPH

This is not common practice in New Zealand, and we prefer it if you didn't

MAKE IT TOO PERSONAL

Avoid personal information like how many kids you have, your marital status or what you like to do after hours. Keep it relevant. There is such thing as too much information.

A well-written CV will not only help you get an interview, it will also continue to work for you throughout the recruitment process. Use your CV during the interview to focus the interviewer on your achievements. Afterwards, it will be re-read to sum up the candidates and to make the final hiring decision – you or them.